

ALLYSHIP: Supporting each other

Women in Wildlife Conservation Network

Celebrating 10 years continuing the work to help us all!

Allyship: What does it mean and how do we support each other?

YOU'RE INVITED!

Creating a welcoming culture is one of the steps in the Relevancy Roadmap aimed at retaining diverse values within the workforce. To ensure continued support for conservation and conservation agencies and organizations in contemporary society, we need tools to reach and engage broader audiences. To remain relevant given the values of the changing demographics of our nation's public, natural resource agencies and organizations must seek diversity in their workforces by becoming more inclusive in their practices and policies. We can start with ourselves!

Description: Through an interactive format, workshop participants will learn about and practice how to provide allyship to each other, starting from a grounding in gender equity. Objectives: Participants understand gender bias and challenges facing women in conservation, and actions they can take to overcome them and support each other. Participants learn how from each other's experiences and perceptions.

Women in Wildlife Conservation Network Workshop:

Allyship: What does it mean and how do we support each other?

Featuring: Megan Jones, Ph.D. (Colorado State University) author of the paper "Challenges and supports for women conservation leaders" & Jenn Malpass, Ph.D. (US Geological Survey), Diversity Change Agent.

When: Tuesday, March 9th @ 2-4:45PM CST

The workshop is free!

Women in Wildlife Conservation Network Social:

When: Tuesday, March 9th @ 5:00-6:00PM CST

These Events are not exclusively for women. We encourage everyone to attend regardless of gender identity.

Thank you to our sponsor:

Join us!

Women in Wildlife Conservation Network

Mission: to empower and inspire women in the natural resources and conservation community; to provide a venue to share and learn from all genders; to help women aspire to and succeed in leadership positions; and to welcome all women into the conservation field.